GALLANT CONDUCT OF AN ALA-HAMA LAD. The war correspondent of the Charleston Courier, writing from Manassas, relates the following incident:

Another incident of a similar character is related of a young Alabama boy, named W. B. Oakley, a private in the Landerdale Rifles. He is only seventeen years of age, but a goody mumber of inches, a strong desire to volunteer, and E manily countenance enabled him to stridged the regulations and join a company. How well be handled him to shridged the freedom of speech and of the well he has done his duty, the following recital will show: During the action, having strayed away from his regiment to fight "on his own pendent enough to expose his treason to hook " he was taken prisoner by one of the liberty. claimed. Young Alabama, however, was posupon the battle field to be subsequently resensed of too much Angle Saxon clasticity to occopy his recumbent attitude in idleness, and setting to work with a good pair of jaws, he soon knawed spart the fine rope which bound his lands. Then with a pocket knife, he severed the cords around his feet, and seizing a nusket from the side of a dead man, he started on his return to his regiment. On the way he encountered another "pet lamb," and he encountered another "pet lamb," and authorities relied on the principles consecrated without further introduction ran him through with his bayonet, and secured his side United States, that, to secure the rights of the through with his bayonet, and secured his side wims. Continuing his journey, he came sud dealy upon a federal colonel, who was reconnottering upon horseback. Not supposing the young man to be an enemy, the officer paid no a tention to his approach until the juvenile hero presented his masket and demanded his surrenver. "Who are you?" asked the colonel. "I'm an Alabamian—come down, you are my prisoner." Like Capt. Scott's squirrel, the officer did come down, and the young man, mounting the horse, accompanied him to the headquarters of Gen. Beauregard, where he was duly delivered up. The general was so pleased with the account of the adventure that he necessated him with the officer's sword, and is said to have dubbed him rantage on the said to have dubbed him rantage on the said to have dubbed him rantage on the clause in the very co-stitution with which she was admitted into the Union, asserting as one
